Inside the White House Visitor's Office

A look at how visitor data illustrates the scale of public access.

The White House Visitor's Office coordinates public tours and official visits to the White House Complex. Every guest who passes through the gates represents one small part of a large, carefully managed operation — and over the past three years, that operation has grown dramatically.

PEAK MONTHLY VISITORS	COMPLEX FACILITIES SERVED	THREE YEARS OF ACCESS DATA

SECTION 01

A Rising Tide of Visitors

Monthly visitation has climbed sharply since 2021 — rising from a few thousand guests per month to recurring peaks near 120,000. The steady upward trend reflects the return and expansion of public access to the White House Complex.

SECTION 02

Seasonal & Weekly Patterns

Traffic builds through the warmer months and surges every December, the single busiest month of the year. Across the week, Tuesday through Saturday carry the heaviest load, while Sundays and Mondays are comparatively quiet — a rhythm that shapes how staffing and screening are scheduled.

SECTION 03

Where Visitors Go

Demand varies sharply across facilities. The White House (WH) itself receives the overwhelming majority of visitors, followed by the Eisenhower Executive Office Building (OEOB). Throughout 2023 that mix held steady month to month, with the White House consistently driving overall volume.

SECTION 04

The Scale of Each Appointment

The vast majority of appointments involve small groups. But occasional large-scale events — some exceeding several thousand guests — require substantial additional coordination, screening capacity, and planning to host safely.

WHY THIS MATTERS

The Work Behind Public Access

Security Screening

Large visitor volumes require coordinated security screening and carefully controlled access procedures at every entry point.

Facility Operations

Processing visitors requires staffing, scheduling, maintenance, and coordination across multiple secure facilities.

Public Access

Maintaining secure public access supports transparency and civic engagement while protecting the Executive Office of the President.

A CALL TO ACTION

Support continued investment in the White House Visitor's Office to help maintain secure, efficient, and transparent public access to one of our nation's most important institutions.
